This 3-days-training was facilitated by 3 facilitators from the Institut Lingkaran Pendidikan Alternatif (KAPAL) Perempuan and a guest speaker of Ms. Ni Luh Riniti, who shared her experience in fighting for gender justice in Bali. 34 participants (20 women and 14 men) from Conservation International (CI) Indonesia and KEHATI Foundation as BAF Administrators were attended the training enthusiastically.

The main objective of this training is to inspire, invite, and support more women and women's groups in conservation programs, as well as to apply gender principles as new mindset in daily activities, particularly in managing natural resources.

During the sessions, the participants were provided with a variety of topics, ranging from the basic concepts of gender & sex, mapping women problems in natural resource management, forms and factors causing gender injustice, principles for fighting gender justice, to gender analysis tools. The training methodology included presentations of conceptual issues and emphasized on exploring the participants' experience and perspectives as well as participants' involvement in case discussions and role-play.

Role play on gender case study

At the end of the session, participants also carried out an exercise to integrate the gender equality perspective in the real program, starting from the output planning & activities in the proposal, implementation in the community, as well as monitoring and evaluating the results of implementation. With this simulation, it is expected that participants can follow up the training by incorporating a gender equality perspective in supervised projects as well as organizational management.
